ABSTRACT

Results of the Annual Salary Questionnaire for Medical School Faculties are presented for fiscal year 1969-70, based on returns from 90 medical schools. Salaries on 4,153 basic scientists and 11,755 clinical faculty are reported. Figures on strict full-time faculty are reasonably complete and are reliable, but they do not reflect the cost of the school or value to the individual of various benefit programs. The figures do not purport to show total income, but only the salary through the medical school for professional services for teaching, service, or research.

ASSOCIATION OF AMERICAN MEDICAL COLLEGES

Foreword

We are pleased to present the Annual Salary Questionnaire for Medical School Faculties for fiscal year 1969-70. Ninety medical schools have submitted returns on faculty members.

This study began as an interval document for the assistance of the administrative authorities in management. Recently forces within and without the Association are tending to extend its use and its influence. Under these new conditions, the importance of accuracy and comprehensiveness needs emphasis. Progress is being made in this direction and salaries on 4,153 basic scientists and 11,755 clinical faculty were reported for this study.

The accuracy of the figures depends upon the accuracy of the returns. The development of a Business Officers Section of the Association of American medical Colleges has improved the quality, participation, and efficiency of the data collection. Figures on strict full-time faculty are reasonably complete and are reliable. It should be understood, however, that these figures do not reflect the cost to the school or value to the individual of various benefit programs ranging from substantial tax-sheltered retirement plans to hospitalization and tuition grants.

In the geographic arrangements for faculty salaries, a significant number of schools and departments failed to report the variable component of the salary derived from fees for professional services. This discrepancy appears in the calculations of totals for geographic full-time faculty and the ranges, averages and means for this category do not reflect the true figures. Only by improvement in the reporting can significant data be obtained in the future for this category of faculty.

Finally, these figures do not perport to show total income, but only the salary provided through the medical school for professional services for teaching, service or research. Supplementary forms of income such as honoraria, consultation fees, lectureships are frequently not included in the salary returns.
